Excerpt: . two he wrote before he went to Italy after their parting; but his letters to his friends are filled with that anguish and longing of the heart that tears him whenever he thinks of her. I can bear to die; I cannot bear to leave her, he cries. The very thing I want to live for will be a great occasion of my death. I wish for death every day and night to deliver me from these pains, and then I wish death away, for death would destroy these pains, which are better than nothing. Again, -Oh that I could be buried near where she lives! I am afraid to write to her, to receive a letter from her; to see her handwriting would break my heart. Even to hear of her, to see her name written, would be more than I can...
