At the rise of the curtain, cheers are heard off R., and enter Harry Fairfield, followed by Old Miller, farm hands, millers and maids. As they enter they cheer. Harry, [L.] Friends and neighbors, this is the first time since my father s death that in my own name I bid you welcome to our harvest home. It is only one short year that I have been your master, but we have known each other long, and love each other well. As you found my father, so shall you find me - not only an employer, but a friend. I have invited the men in yonder mill to join you in your festivities, and as I see they are coming I will once more bid you welcome, and enjoin you to be merry and wise. Farmers, (R.) Hear! Hear! Three cheers for Master Harry. All. Hurrah! Hurrah! Hurrah! Har. I am glad...
